

Abstract Words:

water

animals

stones

light

record

boat

journey

family

food

weapon

fire

mountain

seed

sand

rock

clothing

building

tree

“After all, who has any greater need to ‘treasure up’ the truths of the gospel (on which they may call in their moments of need) than do women and mothers who do so much nurturing and teaching?”

- President Spencer W. Kimball

“After all, who has any greater need to ‘treasure up’ the truths of the gospel (on which they may call in their moments of need) than do women and mothers who do so much nurturing and teaching?”

- President Spencer W. Kimball

Likening the scriptures games

1. Have a family member close his or her eyes and draw a random word from the bag; then share a scripture story that uses that word or idea. Tell how a principle from that scripture story applies to us today.

2. Two contestants face each other and an abstract word is given. The first contestant to tell how to liken that word to a gospel principle wins a team point. Contestants then go back to their teams, which are both given the same scripture and a time limit within which they must come up with as many personal applications as possible (Family Feud style). Points are awarded for each valid personal application which does not duplicate the opposing team’s answers.

Likening the scriptures games

1. Have a family member close his or her eyes and draw a random word from the bag; then share a scripture story that uses that word or idea. Tell how a principle from that scripture story applies to us today.

2. Two contestants face each other and an abstract word is given. The first contestant to tell how to liken that word to a gospel principle wins a team point. Contestants then go back to their teams, which are both given the same scripture and a time limit within which they must come up with as many personal applications as possible (Family Feud style). Points are awarded for each valid personal application which does not duplicate the opposing team’s answers.

Abstract Words:

water

animals

stones

light

record

boat

journey

family

food

weapon

fire

mountain

seed

sand

rock

clothing

building

tree

Abstract Words:

water

animals

stones

light

record

boat

journey

family

food

weapon

fire

mountain

seed

sand

rock

clothing

building

tree

- Use pencils or colored markers. Avoid using pens that bleed through the paper.
- Shade, underline, bracket, or outline part of a verse, an entire verse, or a group of verses.
- Avoid excessive marking. The benefit is lost if you cannot understand your markings because you have made too many notes, lines, and colors.
- Underline only a few key words to highlight the verse, section, or chapter.
- Circle or underline key words, and then use straight lines to link closely related words.
- When a series of points in a verse or passage are related, number the points in the margin or text.
- Use the footnotes as a resource for marking and interpreting the scriptures.
- Place a symbol (such as a check mark) in the margin for key verses you feel are critical to remember.

("Marking Scriptures", Preach My Gospel, pg. 24)

- Use pencils or colored markers. Avoid using pens that bleed through the paper.
- Shade, underline, bracket, or outline part of a verse, an entire verse, or a group of verses.
- Avoid excessive marking. The benefit is lost if you cannot understand your markings because you have made too many notes, lines, and colors.
- Underline only a few key words to highlight the verse, section, or chapter.
- Circle or underline key words, and then use straight lines to link closely related words.
- When a series of points in a verse or passage are related, number the points in the margin or text.
- Use the footnotes as a resource for marking and interpreting the scriptures.
- Place a symbol (such as a check mark) in the margin for key verses you feel are critical to remember.

("Marking Scriptures", Preach My Gospel, pg. 24)

- Use pencils or colored markers. Avoid using pens that bleed through the paper.
- Shade, underline, bracket, or outline part of a verse, an entire verse, or a group of verses.
- Avoid excessive marking. The benefit is lost if you cannot understand your markings because you have made too many notes, lines, and colors.
- Underline only a few key words to highlight the verse, section, or chapter.
- Circle or underline key words, and then use straight lines to link closely related words.
- When a series of points in a verse or passage are related, number the points in the margin or text.
- Use the footnotes as a resource for marking and interpreting the scriptures.
- Place a symbol (such as a check mark) in the margin for key verses you feel are critical to remember.

("Marking Scriptures", Preach My Gospel, pg. 24)